American Podiatric Medical Association. You typically take this type of drug for six to 12 weeks. These drugs help a new nail grow free of infection, slowly replacing the infected part. These drugs are often the first choice because they clear the infection more quickly than do topical drugs. Mayo Clinic does not endorse companies or products. Knowing the cause of your infection helps determine the best course of treatment. And even if your nail condition improves, repeat infections are common. Doctors may not recommend them for people with liver disease or congestive heart failure or those taking certain medications. Talk with your doctor if self-care strategies and over-the-counter nonprescription products haven't helped.
