The nails should be kept short and well trimmed. It is not surprising that the laity are unsuspecting of the pathogenic significance or the potentiality for mischief of a disease which the physician regarded as practically cured. Now that we have already shown the practical improbability of self-infection we can readily see the extreme responsibility resting on the attendants, as we have at last been forced to the conclusion that the attendants are the principal source of septic infection. In every respect the patient should be prepared as she would be for a surgical operation. When we consider that it is necessary to sterilize a polished steel or nickel-plated instrument in order to render it aseptic, we can easily see the task we have before us in order to thoroughly cleanse our hands, as they are, no doubt, the medium by which, in the majority of cases, we convey the infection, as they afford not only a harbor but also a favorable medium for the production of septic organisms, especially under and around the finger nails, for they are exposed at all times to infection, and the most virulent types of it. According to Crookshank, than whom there is probably no better authority, one minute in pure alcohol or 1-in carbolic solution will destroy any of the organisms. Specific infectious vulvovaginitis and that due to simple causes have certain clinical characteristics in common redness, swelling, and purulent discharge. The bed linen and patient's clothing should be fresh from the laundry. We often find in these cases that there is a desire to use a soiled skirt or sheet to put under the patient to economize in the washing; this can not be too strongly condemned, as everything that comes in contact with the patient should be surgically clean. The time is not long past when the existence of an intermittent gleet was not thought to be an obstacle to marriage. It is also probable that many cases of metritis and salpingitis occurring in virgins and young women at the age of puberty or later, and the origin of which was indeterminate, may be ascribed to an antecedent vulvovaginitis which may have been overlooked or forgotten. Professor Shuttleworth told me that he had on different occasions made cultures of streptococci.
