Zantac can be used safely in babies. Too much acid reflux for too long can cause sores or ulcers. Just like GERD in adults, in infants it can be managed several ways. As your baby grows, their lower esophageal sphincter will start to work better and they will spit up less. The over-the-counter Zantac you may already have in your medicine cabinet is not approved for babies. Ranitidine is used to treat intestinal and stomach ulcers and GERD and to heal acid-related damage. This muscle opens to let food move from the esophagus into the stomach. Most people tolerate Zantac fairly well, but it is possible for your baby to have side effects. How did it work for you?
