An article in Business Day yesterday about a federal court decision that upheld the patent on Plavix, a blood thinner marketed by Bristol-Myers Squibb and Sanofi-Aventis, misstated the potential financial damages that the Canadian drug maker Apotex might have to pay the companies for selling a generic version last year. A federal district judge in Manhattan upheld the patent on the anti-clotting drug Plavix yesterday, removing a weighty uncertainty for Bristol-Myers Squibb and Sanofi-Aventis, the companies that market the widely used product. The agreement to limit damages was one of the considerations that prompted Apotex to ship its product last year. In addition to upholding the Plavix patent, Judge Stein prohibited the generic-drug producer Apotex from selling its copy of the drug in the United States. Bayer HealthCare Pharmaceuticals Inc. Stein, who issued the decision, had signaled in a preliminary ruling last fall that he would probably uphold the patent, which is not scheduled to expire until To view content sources and attributions, please refer to our editorial policy. The search followed accusations that the companies had entered into a secret side deal to thwart a regulatory review of the proposed patent settlement.
