Like the stimulant drugs, Strattera is effective in treating and controlling ADHD symptoms, but it is not a controlled substance and people are less likely to abuse the drug or become dependent on it. Antidepressants have the advantage of a low potential for abuse, and there is no evidence that they suppress growth or contribute to significant weight loss. It is usually taken once or twice a day and may be taken with or without food. Antidepressant treatment seems to improve attention span as well as impulse control, hyperactivity, and aggressiveness. MAO inhibitors can cause a wide variety of side effects, including dangerously increased blood pressure when combined with certain foods or medications. For additional health information, please contact the Center for Consumer Health Information at the Cleveland Clinic or toll-free extension 1-800-445-2437. There are certain situations in which a person should not take Strattera. They require periodic EKGs to look for these heart problems. Each type of antidepressant has its own contraindications and usage warnings, and you should discuss these with your doctor. Generally, these side effects are not severe, and only a very small percentage of clinical trial participants stopped Strattera due to side effects. This information is provided by the Cleveland Clinic and is not intended to replace the medical advice of your doctor or health care provider. Effexor can cause nausea, anxiety, sleep problems, tremor, dry mouth, and sexual problems in adults. Clonidine and guanfacine may be contraindicated if there is a history of low blood pressure or other personal or family history of a significant heart problem. In September, the manufacturer added a warning stating that the drug can increase suicidal thinking in teens who take the drug. If blood tests show evidence of liver damage, the drug should also be stopped.
