The study was carried out by researchers on behalf of the pharmaceutical company Boehringer Ingelheim, the manufacturer of Pradaxa. The researchers then calculated the risk of having a stroke in those who had received mg Pradaxa compared to those who had received warfarin in each subgroup. It also found that the type of AF, whether temporary or persistent, had no impact on the effect of Pradaxa. The researchers said that mg Pradaxa taken twice daily may reduce the risk of stroke compared to warfarin, and this reduction applies across the different levels of atrial fibrillation associated with stroke risk. In the first subanalysis, the researchers grouped people according to their risk factors for stroke. Where did the story come from? What did the research involve? The researchers also looked at the risk of bleeding a potential side effect of anti-clotting agents. The news coverage relates to a press release and the results that were presented at a cardiology conference detailing whether different subgroups of patients who received Pradaxa had a lower risk of stroke than those who were given warfarin. The persistent AF group had a HR of 0. Oct 17, - Charts are organised by BNF classification and show comparative costs at basic.
