Your participation is voluntary. Health Canada also monitors research about interactions between drugs, natural health and food products, and communicates information to health professionals and consumers about the risk of potential interactions. If you take warfarin, you should be aware that certain drugs, natural health products and foods can alter the levels of warfarin in your system, and this may cause serious health effects. To report any adverse reaction or interaction involving any health product, contact Health Canada at or by fax at Certain drugs prescription and over-the-counter, natural health products such as herbal remedies, vitamins and supplements and even some foods are known or suspected to interact with warfarin in a way that changes the level of the drug in your bloodstream. Health Canada takes an integrated approach to the management of the risks and benefits related to health products and food by: Report a problem or mistake on this page. For example, too much warfarin may cause excessive bleeding, while too little could affect the drug's ability to prevent clots, and this could lead to serious health effects, such as a heart attack or stroke. For this reason, people who take warfarin must be cautious when considering taking these other products. Vitamin K is known to decrease the effects of warfarin, and there are large amounts of vitamin K in such foods as liver, broccoli, brussels sprouts, and green leafy vegetables e.
