State, not federal, regulators control the practice of medicine and pharmacy within their borders. Intrastate commerce is controlled by the states. Federal and state governments are joining forces to curtail and eliminate such practices. It is not intended as legal advice but is designed to promote discussion. Rasmussen, the state of Iowa sued to enjoin an Iowa pharmacy from filling prescriptions written by nonresident physicians not licensed to prescribe controlled substances in Iowa. In some instances, such as interstate commerce, federal laws prevail over the laws of the states. The states may not, however, interfere with the practice of medicine in other states, nor may they impede interstate commerce. The question asked goes to the core of the U. The Rasmussen case, cited below, would indicate that patients could not be restricted from sending their physician's prescriptions into another state. Pharmacists should consult their own attorney for specific advice. However, the Court finds that this local interest is outweighed by the burden placed on interstate commerce by allowing each state to require out-of-state wholesale drug distributors to register prior to shipping drugs into that particular state.
