Genital herpes is caused by the herpes simplex virus HSV. Anyone who has sex can catch genital herpes. Who gets Genital Herpes? How do you get infected with Genital Herpes? Headaches Backaches Flu-like symptoms, including fever, swollen lymph nodes, and fatigue How Serious is Genital Herpes The majority of people with genital herpes experience mild and infrequent symptoms. The three medicines are all comparable in their effectiveness. Genital herpes is very similar to the herpes that appear on the hands and face 'cold sores', but is found on or around the penis, anus or vagina. There are blisters and inflammation at the site of infection and the sufferer may feel generally unwell. After the first episode of infection with HSV the virus enters into a dormant phase in the nerve, which supplies feeling to the area where infection occurred.
