The courses take place on Monday in Utrecht. Various methods and models in topics like project planning, production planning and scheduling, maintenance, replacement, allocation, routing and transport, distribution, inventory, investments, telecommunication and congestion are a result of this. The PhD programme, which is centered around 18 courses, taught in a two-years cycle, aims at broadening and deepening the knowledge of the PhD students in the mathematics of Operations Research. Besides, one can find Operations Researchers working for large business companies and government institutions, in profit as well as in non-profit organizations. However, Master students in mathematics, econometrics or computer science who acquired enough prerequisites are also welcome. If PhD courses have already been taken during the Master program, these courses are also taken into consideration for the LNMB diplom and it is mentioned on the diploma that the courses are part of a Master program. The programme is flexible in the sense that new PhD students can start with their programme at the beginning of any trimester. Mostly, but not always, these models are abstractions of management problems from large business organizations. During this conference prominent - usually foreign - researchers lecture on special topics or on recent research. These courses are intended for Master students in Mathematics or Econometrics who want to take one or more courses in Operations Research. The PhD students in OR often accept, having the doctor's degree, a job in business. Partly due to early exploitation of the possibilities that computers offer, the discipline went through a stormy development. A final decision about the credits and the grade is formally up to the university of the student. Under certain circumstances the supervisor may submit a motivated request to give the diploma to a PhD student although he or she did not meet the requirement of the PhD presentation. The following regulation holds for the course fee. Other participants pay for each course a fee of euro. The courses are intended for PhD students in Operations Research. Although particular models and techniques of OR have earlier origins, it is generally agreed that the discipline began during World War II. It is up to their thesis adviser to propose or decide that a PhD student will attend such a course. Can I get a prescription for viagra or cialis written by a Mexican Dr?
