This inhibition is accomplished in 3 ways: Systemic exposure following topical administration of acyclovir is minimal. There is no information available for overdose. Acyclovir is an antiviral drug active against herpes simplex virus [see Microbiology]. These concentrations would potentially expose the nursing infant to a dose of acyclovir up to 0. In cell culture, acyclovir triphosphate stops replication of herpes viral DNA. Safety and effectiveness in pediatric patients less than 12 years of age have not been established. Nursing mothers who have active herpetic lesions near or on the breast should avoid nursing. The inhibitory activity of acyclovir is highly selective due to its affinity for the enzyme thymidine kinase TK encoded by HSV. The pKa's of acyclovir are 2. The monophosphate is further converted into diphosphate by cellular guanylate kinase and into triphosphate by a number of cellular enzymes. Other reported clinical experience has not identified differences in responses between the elderly and younger patients. Medicines are sometimes prescribed for purposes other than those listed in a Patient Information leaflet. However, after oral administration of ZOVIRAX, acyclovir concentrations have been documented in breast milk in two women and ranged from 0. The possibility of viral resistance to acyclovir should be considered in patients who show poor clinical response during therapy.
