Advertising revenue supports our not-for-profit mission. Corticosteroid eyedrops are used to relieve persistent itchy, red or watery eyes when other interventions aren't effective. Because some of these drugs can cause drowsiness and fatigue, take them with caution when you need to drive or do other activities that require alertness. Long-term use can cause cataracts, osteoporosis, muscle weakness, stomach ulcers, increased blood sugar glucose and delayed growth in children. Products and Services Book: Pharmacotherapy of allergic rhinitis. Corticosteroid creams relieve allergic skin reactions such as itching, redness, scaling or other irritations. Oral antihistamines, available over-the-counter and by prescription, ease a runny nose, itchy or watery eyes, hives, swelling, and other signs or symptoms of allergies. Side effects can include an unpleasant smell or taste, nasal irritation, and nosebleeds. A physician specializing in eye disorders ophthalmologist usually monitors the use of these drops because of the risk of vision impairment, cataracts, glaucoma and infection. Long-term use, especially of stronger prescription corticosteroids, can cause thinning of the skin and disruption of normal hormone levels. If antihistamine drops sting or burn, try keeping them in the refrigerator or using refrigerated artificial-tear drops before you use the medicated drops. Antihistamine eyedrops, available over-the-counter or by prescription, can ease itchy, red, swollen eyes.
